companies spend tens of dollars each year in advertising and transportation costs to attract a local sales force. Their ranks, according to the Daily Universe, are growing.

company.

Brown said he tells all new recruits that at times the job of selling insurance door-to-door can be tough, hard work.

"Last year maybe we were a bit too optimistic and took too many people down to Southern California. But we had indications that the communities would respond to our product more than they did."

In an effort to counteract the oversaturation problem many salesmen faced last year, most insurance sales companies will be expanding their territory. This should lower the chances of salesmen bumping into each other.

Concerning summer incomes, Brown said the average worker selling insurance in California came home with $6,000 after expenses, and that average figure is based on those who started the program and finished. Roughly 30 percent do not complete a full summer's selling contract.

The average salesman returning to school from selling books and tapes all summer brought back $4,300 after expenses, according to John Mallett, assistant divisional manager for a leading Orem-based book/tape company.

"A lot of guys got hurt last summer because many areas were saturated with insurance salesmen," he said.

Another major factor was that other companies didn't train their people as well as they should have. The salesmen were going through an area too fast.

"One thing to take into consideration when looking at selling insurance door-to-door is that people have been knocking on the same doors for the past five years," said John Freeze, a senior from Jeffersonville, Ind., majoring in marketing. "Not to mention the students and full-time salesmen from local areas going over the same market all year long."

Will Hoggan, a former salesman for one company and a junior from Gilroy, Calif., majoring in administration, said many ill-founded stories have developed about salesmen who not only are reported to have used word rosters to solicit referrals-based customers, but have been using The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as a vehicle for their commercial gain.

"Each salesman is required to sign an ethics contract, which is an agreement that using word rosters is forbidden, and that they should not play up the church when making sales."

He said the common company policy is to contact the bishops of the wards in selling areas in an effort to avoid any misunderstandings with the product and to see whether any previous wrongdoings can be corrected.

"Most of the insurance companies are experiencing growing pains, but overall I'd have to say the companies are pretty fair," John Breaux, a junior from San Diego majoring in business, said.

"If I were a student looking into possibly selling insurance this summer, I'd go for it," Brown said. "But I'd make sure to get all the facts and the straight answers before I went. I'd check everything out."

Richard Johnson, an assistant over the summer division of a locally-based book/tape sales company, said there is a definite need for the company's products in the community.

"If there weren't a need to sell these books and tapes to church members and non-members alike," he said, "we wouldn't be in business."

"Perhaps some prior customers give us names from their ward rosters, but our salesmen don't," Johnson said. "To use a ward roster to contact potential customers is against company policy and also against the ethics contract signed by all salesmen."

Reagan reveals plans for new defense system

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Wednesday night the United States will begin work on a futuristic defense system that could destroy Soviet missiles in flight and render "these nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete."

The plan, announced in a nationally broadcast speech from the Oval Office, foreshadows a major departure from three decades of strategy calling for deterring nuclear warfare with the promise of massive retaliation.

Reagan said it could be the turn of the century before such defensive weapons could be produced. Apparently, his plan envisions laser and particle-beam technology that currently exists more in theory than fact.

Save lives

"Would it not be better to save lives than to avenge them?" Reagan said. He said that after consulting with the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other advisers, "I believe there is a better way . . . that we embark on a program to counter the awesome Soviet missile threat with measures that are defensive."

He said such a system posed a "formidable technical task" that might not be accomplished before the end of the century.

"Yet current technology has attained a level of sophistication where it is reasonable for us to begin this effort," Reagan said. "It will take years, probably decades, of effort on many fronts."

Reagan's proposals came as he renewed his push for a major defense buildup, even as the House neared a vote on a Democratic budget plan which would slash that increase by half.

Currently the United States and the Soviet Union are virtually banned by treaty from deploying an antiballistic missile system (ABM). But "tonight, consistent with our obligations under the ABM treaty and recognizing the need for close consultation with our allies, I am taking an important first step," that would employ different technologies, he said.

Specifically, Reagan said he was "directing a comprehensive and intensive effort to define a long-term research and development program to achieve our ultimate goal of eliminating the threat posed by strategic nuclear missiles."

"This could pave the way for arms control measures to eliminate the weapons themselves," he said.

"We seek neither military superiority nor political advantage," Reagan added. "Our only purpose — one all people share — is to search for ways to reduce the danger of nuclear war."

Reagan noted the current policy of deterrence through the threat of retaliation. "But what if free people could live secure in the knowledge that their security did not rest upon the threat of instant U.S. retaliation to deter a Soviet attack; that we could intercept and destroy strategic ballistic missiles before they reached our own soil or that of our allies?"

He said that despite the difficulties, "it is not worth every investment necessary to free the world from the threat of nuclear war? We know it is."

The president said the United States would continue to pursue nuclear arms reductions, "negotiating from a position of strength that can be ensured only by modernizing our strategic forces."

Take steps

At the same time, he said, the United States "must take steps to reduce the risk of a conventional military conflict escalating to nuclear war by improving our non-nuclear capabilities."

Reagan said he recognized that defensive systems "have limitations and raise certain problems and ambiguities. If paired with offensive systems, they can be viewed as fostering an aggressive policy, and no one wants that."

"But with these considerations firmly in mind," he added, "I call upon the scientific community who gave us nuclear weapons to turn their great talents to the cause of mankind and world peace; to give us the means of rendering these nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete."

"My fellow Americans, tonight we are launching an effort which holds the promise of changing the course of human history," said Reagan. "There will be risks, and results take time."

"But with your support, I believe we can do it," he said.

In a briefing before the speech, a senior administration official said the research will be aimed at lasers, particle-beam weapons and other futuristic technologies that might be used to shoot down incoming missiles.

Mother Nature 'springs' snow on Provo

While the calendar says it is the first week of spring, Mother Nature did not cooperate Wednesday. Eight inches of snow were dumped on the east bench, and 4 inches fell on the BYU campus.

There was only a 3-inch accumulation on the ground at any one time on campus, according to David James, BYU weather observer.

"The amount of precipitation is not unusual, but it is above average," said David Carpenter of the National Weather Service.

Carpenter said precipitation for March was recorded at 2.42 inches Tuesday night, which is 1.27 inches above a normal March month.

Since Oct. 1, Utah has received 9.88 inches of precipitation — 2.23 inches above an average water year, he said.

The additional water has caused some problems in the Utah area. Concern over the flooding of Utah Lake has prompted varying predictions in the lake's flood level.

The "compromise" level is the lake's optimal level. When the water reaches this level, it must be drained. Carpenter said the lake is 2.03 feet above compromise level right now and is predicted to reach 2.5 feet by the first of May.

Dr. Dale Stevens, in charge of the BYU weather station, said Utah county engineers predict the lake will rise to more than 4 feet above compromise level.

The wetness has also caused some problems with roads and home.

Homes located on various lots on the east bench of Provo are being threatened by land sliding beneath them. Some homes have begun to develop cracks in the walls and driveways.

Former Y student Barney Clark dies after 112th day

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Barney Clark, the world's first and only recipient of a permanent artificial heart, died at the University of Utah Medical Center late Wednesday night, his 112th day with the device, said hospital spokesman John Dwan.

Clark died at 10:02 p.m. MST from "circulatory collapse due to multi-organ system failure," Dwan said.

Dwan would not elaborate immediately, but said Dr. William C. DeVries, who implanted the plastic heart Dec. 2, was with Clark, as was Dr. Lynn Joyner.

Clark's wife, Una Loy, was in an adjacent room when Clark died, said Dwan, who was pale and visibly shaken when he broke the news.

Clark's son, Steven Clark, a surgeon in Seattle, was unaware his father had died when contacted by telephone.

"Thanks for the information," he said. "In a way, we were expecting that, but I have no comment."

Clark's wife told a social worker that a couple weeks before the operation her husband told her he wanted to do it because it could be a great success for him, and, if it wasn't, he would have the "rare opportunity to live."

Their son Stephen, a Seattle surgeon, said he doubted his father had really expected the operation to work.

"His interest in going ahead, he told this to me, was to make this contribution, whereas the only other way was to die of this disease," Stephen Clark said.

The Clarks' other children, Gary Clark and Karen Shaffer, live in the Seattle area.

At 42 and a few years ago, Clark was an avid golfer and at one time was president of the Rainier Golf and Country Club. "He used to go on a lot of golf trips," Stephen Clark said.

But Clark's life following the implant was a tough struggle punctuated with hope, despair and days of little or no improvement.

Clark suffered the pain and repeated operations the consent form had warned of.

Despite them, he told DeVries in a taped interview March 1 that he would tell other potential recipients, "It's worth it if the alternative is they either die or they have it done."

"It's been a pleasure to be able to help people and then, you folks have learned something," he told the doctor.

Dwan said Clark died a quiet, quiet and unobtrusive man. "I think he would tell other potential recipients, 'It's worth it if the alternative is they either die or they have it done.'"

"Dr. Clark was an unbelievable person — a strong, strong man. You've got to think of the family," he said.

Clark died at the end of a day which brought increasingly pessimistic news from doctors during three news conferences.

At the last one, three hours before Clark's death, Dr. Chase Peterson said the former Seattle-area dentist had been moved back into intensive care at 4:30 p.m. and was degraded from fair to critical condition.

Peterson said Clark had experienced a brief but dramatic drop in the output of his artificial heart about 12:15 p.m.

Peterson said a possible cause of the cardiac crisis was a bowel infarction, or the death of tissue in Clark's bowel from blood deprivation.

If that were the case, he said, doctors would be able to do nothing for him and the condition would probably have led to Clark's death within 24 to 48 hours.

Demo budget gets House OK

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a stinging rebuke to President Reagan, the House passed Tuesday night a Democratic budget plan that would slash his defense buildup by more than half, raise $30 billion in new taxes and restore $33 billion of his proposed cuts in social programs.

The vote came just as Reagan delivered a nationwide broadcast in which he called for the development of futuristic anti-missile weapons and urged Americans "to tell your senators and congressmen that you know we must continue to restore our military growth."

"If we stop in midstream," Reagan said, "we will not only jeopardize the progress we have made to date — we will mortgage our ability to deter war and achieve genuine arms reductions. And we will send a signal of decline, of lessened will, to friends and adversaries alike."

It was the first time since Reagan took office in 1981 that either house of Congress signaled approval of a tax and spending plan that he opposed.

Overall, the budget crafted by the Democratic caucus calls for spending of $86.3 billion and leaves a deficit of $174.5 billion. Reagan's original package, so unpopular that Republicans didn't see a vote in it, called for less spending but had a slightly higher deficit.

The vote represented a substantial victory for House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and the entire Democratic leadership, who suffered one defeat after another at the hands of Reagan and the Republicans during the last two years.

The House plan doubtless will be revamped in the Republican-controlled Senate, and some officials predict a deadlock as the two houses try to reach agreement on the final tax and spending prescription for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. But Democrats counted on their victory giving them leverage in the conference committee that will have to iron out differences between the versions of the two houses.

Fuel costs cause drop

Inflation put back in 'cage'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, driven down by record plunges in gasoline and fuel-oil costs, fell 0.2 percent in February, only the second time since 1965 that the measure of inflation has declined, the government reported Wednesday.

The new report marked the fourth month in a row of little or no gain in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index, and raised the possibility that inflation for the year would run at its slowest pace in two decades.

President Reagan said, "This steady progress confirms once again that we are putting inflation back in its cage and that our economy is on the mend."

The continued good news on inflation has been mostly attributed by economists to the lengthy recession, good crop harvests and the worldwide oil surplus, which recently forced the OPEC oil cartel to slash its base price for crude oil by $5, to $29 per barrel.

In other economic news Wednesday, the Treasury reported that the government outspent its income by more than $25 billion in February, with receipts of $38.8 billion and expenditures of $64.2 billion. It was the second-largest monthly deficit on record and brought government red ink to $108 billion for the first five months of the fiscal year, compared with $111 billion for all of last year.

Also, average weekly earnings for U.S. workers fell 1.5 percent last month after inflation was taken into account, the biggest monthly drop in almost four years. The big drop was largely the result of fewer hours worked, something chief Commerce Department economist Robert Ortner said was "for other than economic reasons" — that is, the weather.

On inflation, there is no certainty which direction energy prices will go in the future.

Some oil companies are now raising the prices they charge gasoline dealers as world oil prices stabilize. But many economists predict the oil cartel will be forced to cut prices even more in coming months, which may show up later in still lower gasoline and fuel oil prices for American consumers.

One such forecaster, Allen Sinai, senior economist at the Lexington, Mass., consulting firm of Data Resources Inc., predicted 1983 would be "the best year on inflation in the last 20 years."

Added James Annable, chief domestic economist for the First National Bank of Chicago: "The fundamental message is... inflation is going to be very low this year."

Inflation ran at 3.9 percent last year, the best showing since the 3.4 percent of 1971 and 1972. Donald Ratajezak, economic forecaster at Georgia State University, said, though, that February's seasonally adjusted 0.2 percent decline in the price index would probably be the best number all year.

He forecast that food prices, virtually unchanged in the past four months, would start climbing later in the year.

New illness linked to meat

BOSTON (AP) — A mysterious intestinal ailment that first struck diners at a fast-food chain is a new-found disease caused by a rare bacteria, and it has spread across the United States, researchers say.

Federal disease experts are seeking the source of the organism so they can wipe it out, but they fear it is becoming established in the nation's food system.

The first major outbreak appeared last year among 47 people who ate at McDonald's restaurants in Michigan and Oregon. It has since occurred among patients at a Canadian hospital, and 40 scattered cases have been reported in the United States.

The disease is hemorrhagic colitis, and it is caused by a rare form of the common bacteria E. coli. Victims have severe cramps and bloody diarrhea, and the sickness lasts from three days to more than a week.

Undercooked meat

Doctors from the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta call the ailment "a clinically distinctive gastrointestinal illness" and say it is apparently transmitted by undercooked meat.

Although the disease occurred at least once before, doctors did not recognize it as unique until after the restaurant-chain outbreak.

A report on their inquiry into the disease, directed by Dr. Lee W. Riley, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

"If it is a new organism, it may be producing diarrhea by some new, unrecognized mechanism," Riley said in an interview.

The first outbreak was in Medford, Ore., in February and March last year and affected 26 people who had eaten at two McDonald's restaurants. Three months later, the disease struck 21 people who were customers at two of the chain's restaurants in Traverse City, Mich.

Hospitalization

The victims fell ill about four days after eating the hamburgers, and more than two-thirds of them were hospitalized.

From the patients' stool samples, doctors isolated a very rare form of bacteria called E. coli O157:H7. Then they found the same bacteria in a frozen hamburger patty stored at a processing plant. The meat had been kept from a batch that was shipped to the Michigan restaurants.

Steve Leroy, a McDonald's spokesman, declined to comment on the federal report.

In the Michigan outbreak, most victims said they had eaten Big Macs, which have twice as much meat as regular hamburgers.

The illness usually begins with severe cramps, followed by diarrhea.

Doctors find drug that may relieve forms of senility

BOSTON (AP) — A medicine used to treat narcotics abusers shows promise of relieving the confusion and memory loss of old people who have Alzheimer's disease, the most common form of senility, a study shows.

Researchers found the drug naloxone reversed some of the worst symptoms of the disease, which causes about 60 percent of the senility among elderly Americans. Between 2 million and 3 million Americans are estimated to have moderate or severe forms of the disease.

"These are encouraging preliminary results," said Dr. Barry Reisberg, who directed the study at New York University Medical Center.

There is no accepted treatment for Alzheimer's disease, which sometimes strikes people as young as 50. Its victims often cannot remember recent events. They may become confused and irritable, fail to recognize their children and even lose the ability to speak or feed themselves.

In their experiment, the researchers first gave injections of naloxone to five people, and tests showed "notable improvement" in three of them.

Maternity insurance not a separate policy

By EILEEN TRUJILLO
Staff Writer

is no such thing as a maternity insurance policy that sells just its benefits. These benefits are part of a general health insurance policy. Insurance with maternity benefits is available, but there is not a separate maternity policy," said Cox of the Salt Lake Better Business Bureau Insurance Department. Cox said.

Insurance companies make money if they have a separate maternity policy, Karen Sirola, supervisor of the Market Conduct Division of the Utah State Insurance Department, said.

Sirola, a representative at an insurance company, said there are two basic maternity benefits included in most health insurance policies.

One benefit is a "basic" benefit that pays for the cost of the hospital or birth. The "illness" benefit covers the cost of the mother's health care during pregnancy and delivery.

nts interested in purchasing life insurance should carefully consider where their future and study the many payment and programs available before finalizing any agreement, said Pete Kranenburg, a local insurance representative. He said that with dependents often need a surprising amount of life insurance, especially when the dependents are young. He said that when anyone's situation is, however, not calculate the amount of insurance needed in the years to come. Kranenburg said that take into consideration factors such as the family's future financial needs, present and inflation.

de person may not need life insurance at all, but said, "Since most single people support themselves, their death would not bring hardship to anyone, however much they missed for other reasons."

Stewart, another local insurance representative, said some financial hardships can be passed to others, even though a person has no dependents. He said that people may have debts — an outstanding school-related loan, for example. If other dependents or other relatives to take care of expenses and debts. If so, it would make sense to have a modest amount of life insurance.

Insurance policies agree to pay an amount upon the death of the holder, but all are not the same. There are five basic kinds of life insurance.

Term insurance is death protection for a set term of the number of years the original policyholder lives. Death benefits are paid only if the policyholder dies within that term of years.

Whole life insurance is best if the person is young. It will be alive for awhile. When the policyholder reaches 65 years of age, the policy begins to pay a yearly retirement benefit for the rest of the policyholder's life.

Universal life insurance allows the policyholder to pay off the entire policy in a specified time, similar to paying off a car loan.

If people think they are getting a good deal for medical insurance because their premium is low, they may be headed for problems, according to Perry Ficklin, a local group health insurance representative.

Ficklin is one of many insurance agents in the area who agree that to get good health and accident coverage, the client must pay a substantial amount of money. "You cannot shop for insurance like you shop for a car," Ficklin said.

"If a person shops on price for insurance, they will get burned," Ficklin said. "In order for people to decide on one particular medical insurance policy, they must first decide how much they are willing to spend."

There are many medical plans available, but only five types are actively sought-after, according to the Utah State Insurance Commission.

These plans include basic hospital, basic hospital including surgical treatment, accident only, specified diseases and accident, and major medical.

Every health policy has a combination of benefits that attempt to satisfy the needs of every individual or family group, according to the commission.

Once a person decides how much he wants to pay, he must decide just what he wants.

"Prices have been soaring so much in the individual contract business that I forced us to get out of this area of business and go into group insurance," Ficklin said.

The number of insurance companies in the area has been reduced by 75 percent, he said.

"There were 80 companies in the area willing to sell you insurance at this time last year, and now there are only 20," Ficklin said.

Ficklin said this was because companies were not able to make a substantial profit in the Utah County area.

Some of the problem stems from maternity benefits frequently claimed here.

"If people are buying less health coverage, then they are going to have a problem," Ficklin said.

The way Ficklin feels about paying more for better quality coverage seems to be shared by others.

"Things are getting tough health-wise," said Scott D. Randall, another local insurance representative. "It's definitely going to cost more for good health coverage."

He said the companies that are doing the best are those who have nothing to do with maternity; this is where the big bills are, Randall said.

Many insurance companies offer the public three basic plans to choose from because of differing insurance needs.

The insurance commission states that all policies have limitations in reference to the premiums that must be paid by the person in need of insurance.

The deductibles also vary according to the policy. "The higher the deductible, the lower the rate," Ficklin said.

"Things are getting tough health-wise," said Scott D. Randall, another local insurance representative. "It's definitely going to cost more for good health coverage."

He said the companies that are doing the best are those who have nothing to do with maternity; this is where the big bills are, Randall said.

Many insurance companies offer the public three basic plans to choose from because of differing insurance needs.

The insurance commission states that all policies have limitations in reference to the premiums that must be paid by the person in need of insurance.

The deductibles also vary according to the policy. "The higher the deductible, the lower the rate," Ficklin said.

Once a person decides how much he wants to pay, he must decide just what he wants.

"Prices have been soaring so much in the individual contract business that I forced us to get out of this area of business and go into group insurance," Ficklin said.

The number of insurance companies in the area has been reduced by 75 percent, he said.

"There were 80 companies in the area willing to sell you insurance at this time last year, and now there are only 20," Ficklin said.

Ficklin said this was because companies were not able to make a substantial profit in the Utah County area.

Some of the problem stems from maternity benefits frequently claimed here.

Referee Joe Belmont gives a determined look as he points the way to Air Force's Pete McCaffrey during basketball action in the Marriott Center. Referees have long suffered as scapegoats for fans and coaches during athletic contests.

Why be a ref?

Whistle blown on WAC referees

By RHONDA ZMOOS
Staff Writer

There are 30 seconds left in the game. A screaming whistle pierces the air in the middle of a drive to the basket, a score that would have put the team up by one. The fans jump to their feet in a downpour of boos and catcalls.

"Did your mother have any kids that lived?" "How long did they hold you under water?" "Back to the zoo, zebra!"

Who are they yelling at — the pep organizer?

Nope — the referee. The ref, who looks like he's scratching the back of his head, but actually, he just made an unpopular charging call.

Not only does a referee have to ignore verbal abuse from the crowd, but he has to stand and listen while a coach informs him he needs a pair of glasses and a good psychiatrist.

It seems almost everything a ref does is either unpopular or unnoticed. Air Force head coach Hank Egan criticized the quality of Western Athletic Conference officiating after his Falcons lost a close game to Wyoming on March 4. That was when Irv Brown, supervisor of basketball officials in the conference, decided he had had enough criticism.

The next day he announced his resignation from the position, effective at the end of the fiscal year.

"This hurt. It really hurt," Brown told a Denver reporter after the decision had been announced. Egan said since Brown's is a part-time job, he only sees the games he works as a television commentator. Brown said although his job at a television station in Denver takes a lot of his time, he still tries to get the best officials that he can.

Joe Kearney, commissioner of the WAC, released a statement in response to Brown's resignation.

"The WAC owes Irv a debt of gratitude, not only for a distinguished officiating career that marked him as the best in the nation, but also for a superb job as supervisor of officials. Under Irv's leadership as supervisor, the WAC may well have the finest overall corps of basketball officials of any conference in the country."

"He will be missed," Kearney told the press that coaches' criticism of officiating is not unusual. "It happens primarily in basketball because it's such an emotional game," he said.

Brown had to take the criticism of coaches as a referee and a supervisor and was tired of working what seemed a thankless job.

Let's face it, the ref is not the most popular guy out there. A recent article in Time magazine stated, "The combination of television second-guessing and coaches complaining, perhaps alibiing, has brought the striped-shirt arbiters a notoriety they would just as soon have passed them by."

Brown said, "Refs are the most misunderstood people in the world."

Brown ought to know. He was an official for the WAC for twenty-five years and a high school referee in Colorado before that. The veteran of six NCAA tournaments, Brown sits on the press table for CBS at this year's tourney.

NIT Tourney games to be played tonight

The Texas Christian University basketball team features an all-senior front line that ranges from 6-foot-8 to 6-10.

That could present some tall problems for Nebraska in tonight's National Invitation Tournament quarterfinal game at Lincoln, Neb., according to Husker Coach Hank Iba.

"They're a tough team for us to go against because of their size," says Iba. "They play a good matchup zone defense and the 30-second clock will favor that. They also run their motion offense as well as anybody we'll play all year."

The TCU-Nebraska game is one of three NIT contests Thursday night. In other action, Wake Forest meets South Carolina in Greensboro, N.C., and Fresno State plays at Oregon State. The quarterfinal round will conclude Friday night, when Mississippi takes on DePaul in Rosemont, Ill.

Quarterfinal winners will advance to the semifinals Monday in New York's Madison Square Garden. The title game will be played March 30.

TCU is playing some of its best ball of the season.

Ruggers face busy week

The BYU rugby team faces a busy week as they go against Northern Colorado today, and Utah State Saturday on the BYU Haws field.

The BYU ruggers will square off against Northern Colorado at 3:30 p.m.

BYU rugby coach John Seggar said he didn't know about the Northern Colorado team, but he said they were ranked third in the Western Region. "It tends to be the weakest of the four regions," Seggar said about the Western Region.

BYU is ranked second in the Pacific Coast Region, just behind Cal Berkeley, the defending national champions.

Seggar also said that Northern Colorado has not beaten the Cougars in three meetings.

"They (UNC) always give us a pretty good match," said Seggar. The Cougars will be going against USU on Saturday at 2 p.m.

According to Seggar, the Aggies have never beaten BYU, but there is a rivalry between the two teams.

After playing a tough Snake River team last week Seggar said the team might let up.

Y golfers to win?

The third-ranked BYU mens golf team will be competing in the Northern California Collegiate Invitational on Friday and Saturday in Stockton, Calif.

The main competition will come from the host University of Pacific and San Jose State. Both teams are ranked in the Top 20.

UCLA and USC, ranked sixth and seventh nationally, will also be participating in the tournament.

According to BYU Coach Karl Tucker, this is a tournament the Cougars should be favored to win. It would help them get back into the groove of landing first place finishes.

The Cougars have finished first four times in eight tournaments this season. In the other four they have placed second, sixth, and third twice.

BYU's Rick Fehr, who has qualified for the Masters in Augusta, Ga., in April, will be one of the six players that will be competing for BYU in the 54-hole tourney.

the WAC.
 Brown said officials try not to let their like or dislike for a player affect their calls, "but if it's a player you like," he said, "you make sure that fifth foul is a good one."

Brown says it's important to have a referee who doesn't take himself too seriously. Officials who think they're infallible don't last long. "The point is, a ref who can't do the job gets weeded out eventually."

Brown decides the schedule of every WAC re- fer. He said he is under no obligation to give them certain games or certain coaches. "The coaches can blackmail two refs a year, but the refs can't blackball a coach." Brown sends the coaches a form every year, so he can schedule around their preferences.

In each game Brown schedules, he designates a lead official who is supposed to be the dominant referee on the floor. "It's the lead refs job to see that the best team wins. If the game is badly refed, he's responsible."

Brown is under no obligation to keep an official who acquires a bad reputation.

"I've inherited some bad refs, and sometimes I make a mistake and hire a ref who isn't any good. In the last five years, we've probably let twenty refs go."

Brown stressed that all refs are bound to make mistakes. "When I make a bad call, I run out of there as fast as I can and try to catch the last two minutes on the car radio," he said, laughing. "Real- ly, I just realize that it happens. You've got 10 sets of arms and legs out there to keep an eye on, and the hand is quicker than the eye."

"Refs are human. They have an occasional bad night just like everybody else," Brown said. "If a ref has a bad night and the team shoots well, no- body but the ref knows that he stunk. But if he has a good night and the team shoots poorly, he looks bad regardless."

With all the disadvantages to a job like officiat- ing, it's a wonder that anybody wants to do it. But Brown says there are a lot of good things about being a referee, and the best of those is the people.

"I've met many good people — coaches, players, fans, and other refs. I got the job I have now be- cause of my refereeing experience."

"Whatever you do, don't feel sorry for them," Brown said. "Look at Jack Manton, Herschel Wal- ker's agent. Four years ago he was working for me as a ref in the WAC. When Walker signed, he became a rich man." Maybe Brown is right. We shouldn't feel sorry for refs — Manton made a mint that day.

papers referred to the fact that Indiana, the Big Ten champion, has a 24-5 record and a No. 5 rank- ing, while the Wildcats are 22-7 and ranked 12th. Louisville, which went to the Final Four where the Cardinals bowed 90-66 to Georgetown, takes a No. 2 ranking and a 30-3 record into its game against Arkansas, the Southwest Conference run- ner-up with a No. 9 ranking and a 26-3 record.

Rodney McCree of Louisville is looking for his second national title. He was a freshman when the Cardinals beat UCLA in the 1980 final.
 Meanwhile, 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, the best-known and perhaps the most dominant player in the game in the last four years, will try to take another step toward his first national championship.

Virginia, No. 4 and 28-4, will meet Boston Col- lege, a club that was particularly pesky in last year's tournament when it fell one game short of the Final Four. The Eagles are 25-6 and ranked 11th.

IOC to discuss pressing issues

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The International Olympic Committee meets here this week with the emphasis on new faces and changes in the high command. A new vice president and two new members of the executive board — the inner cabinet that plans for the Olympic Games — are to be elected.

The face of the IOC goes on changing. Of the 84 members, fewer than half served under Avery Brundage, the president who defended the Olympic ideals with an iron hand from 1932 to 1972.

Nearly 30 new members have been taken on by the IOC in the last six years, many of them comparatively young men. They have to face the new problems of the Olympic movement — most notable pressures Eagle Marketing is looking for Canadians. And you'll probably be looking for Eagle once you discover the tremendous summer job opportunity they offer. At home in Canada.

Forget the difficulty of obtaining a U.S. work permit for this summer. And forget the high unemployment up north.

If you're sharp, returned missionary or not, you can earn equally sharp money. Like $5,000 to $10,000 in fifteen weeks. That's an average. Some do even better.

Of course, you get the same second-to-none training that Eagle is famous for. And you'll learn professional skills that will pay for themselves many times during your career.

We dare say it's the premier summer job opportunity around. Besides, we'd love to have you on our team. And wouldn't it be nice to spend time at home, with no worries about next year's expenses.

If that sounds appealing, join us for a brief get-acquainted session. Call Rick Burton, 225-9000, for all of the enticing details. Today.

Out-of-state tax affects athletes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When Mike Schmidt, Larry Bird and Wayne Gretzky pay their taxes, a chunk of the money goes to California, even though they live elsewhere.

Why? Because California has a law — an aggressively enforced one — that taxes athletes on the portion of their salaries theoretically earned while playing there.

Other states have similar provisions, but it is California's persistence in collecting its money that is taxing the patience of many.

"I think it's ridiculous," says Bob Pulford, general manager of the Chicago Black Hawks in the National Hockey League. "It's not fair to tax people on one or two games."

Adds Mel Lowell, controller of the New York Rangers of the NHL and New York Knicks of the National Basketball Association: "This is just a nuisance tax. For all the time and effort it takes, the revenue they get is just meaningless."

California, meanwhile, is taking steps to make sure it gets even more from its so-called "celebrity tax." Facing a state deficit that could hit $1.5 billion this year, the state has changed the law to raise an anticipated extra $25 million.

Ben Miller, a California state tax attorney who works heavily with the provision, explained how the change would affect a player for an out-of-state major league baseball team that plays one-eighth of its games in California.

"If you've got an athlete who makes $200,000 a year, and one-eighth of his salary comes from California, we figure one-eighth of $200,000 is $25,000, and that's the income we tax."

In past years, the player would look up $25,000 on state tax tables and figure a tax of about $500, he said. But effective this year, for the first time, the new law applies.

"Now we compute what the state tax would be on a $200,000 income and say one-eighth of the tax on a $200,000 income is the amount you pay in California," Miller said. "It's a big difference, and these people are going to start screaming. Where they used to have a tax liability of $400 or $500, it's going to be a tax liability of $4,000 or $5,000."

Says Larry Bova, shortstop for the Chicago Cubs: "I don't think it's right, but there's nothing you can do about it. What they say is any place you play, they can take your money."

New York state has imposed a similar tax on out-of-state athletes since its personal income tax was first instituted in 1919. New York's tax is now levied on the same sliding scale all state residents are subject to — 2 percent on $1,000, up to 10 percent of income on $17,000 and above.

Warren Brundidge of the state Department of Taxation and Finance says New York's tax "really doesn't apply to anyone except those in the superstar category."

Brundidge said it is basically up to the teams to withhold the New York state taxes from their players' paychecks and forward the money to the tax department, a policy he admits doesn't work too well. But since the non-resident tax brings in "so little" money, he said the state doesn't devote much manpower toward making sure out-of-state teams are complying.

Wisconsin takes in about $50,000 a year from the paychecks of professional athletes, and almost every team that plays in the state appears to be complying, says Daniel Smith, administrator of the state Income, Sales, Inheritance and Excise Tax division.

Missouri, Virginia and Oregon also have such taxes, although officials admit the amount of money they take in through them is negligible.

Louisiana also has such a tax, but Virgil Brady, deputy assistant secretary of the state tax department, says the law is hard to enforce.

"When it comes down to it, I imagine that a lot of people don't file returns," Brady said.

NFL coaches discuss USFL

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — At least two prominent National Football League head coaches hope the fledgling United States Football League is a success because of what it means for people in the sport.

"My feeling is I like to see coaches and players working," said Tom Landry, the only head coach in the history of the Dallas Cowboys. "That's a great thing about the USFL."

"I'm not smart enough to tell what's going to happen, there are so many ifs," said Bum Phillips of the New Orleans Saints. "At a time when the economy needs help, it's going to help a lot of people if the USFL makes it. That's a lot of coaches and players getting a chance."

"I haven't watched them (the USFL) yet," said Landry. "It's going to be a tough thing. I don't care what kind of professional athletes you have, it's going to cost you a lot of money."

"They've got a shot. They've got to have the big TV following if they're going to make it."

Several other high-level NFL people said it was too early to tell about the USFL.

Gerulaitis cleared of coke charge

NEW YORK (AP) — Tennis star Vitas Gerulaitis has been cleared by a federal grand jury of allegations that he had agreed to purchase $20,000 worth of cocaine.

Following a year-long probe, U.S. Attorney John S. Martin Jr. announced Tuesday that no charges would be filed against Gerulaitis, who currently is ranked fifth in the world and known for his jet-setting lifestyle.

Martin said he would not press misdemeanor charges, though he could do so without an indictment. And he said the grand jury action marked the end of the Gerulaitis investigation.

"I'm just happy it's ended," Gerulaitis told reporters, via a telephone hookup between the office of his lawyer, Thomas Puccio, and Milan, Italy, where he was waiting to play his first-round match in the Cuore Cup tournament.

"I know that both sides did what they both felt was correct and just," Gerulaitis said. "I'm just happy with the result."

Gerulaitis, a Brooklyn-born resident of Kings Point, said his family was "greatly relieved" at the outcome of the investigation, though he said he always believed he would be exonerated.

Dancers mix marriage with major

By WENDY CARVER

Mixing movement with marriage and footwork with formula can be difficult. But some members of The Dancers' Company combine the roles of wife, mother, student and dancer into a hectic but rewarding lifestyle.

Several women in The Dancers' Company are married, said director Pat Debenham. Two of the women also have children.

They will perform with the 16-member Dancers' Company as it presents a concert Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. in 185 RE.

Even though the load is hard, Debenham said, "These women in Dancers' Company are in the group because they are committed to dance."

"They are intelligent women interested in using their talents for the benefit of enriching the lives of other people," he said.

There are sacrifices that come as the dancers try to balance a performing career, a teaching career, and all other aspects of their lives, such as motherhood and being a wife, Debenham said.

Even though it is difficult, the women do it with a sense of competence and integrity, he said.

Because the hectic lives of the dancers are tempered with other things, some things must be put aside for a time.

Cathy Allen, a graduate student in dance from Las Vegas, Nev., said it is hard for her to do extra things. Some things, such as homework or extra dance responsibilities, have to suffer. Kathleen Bunker-Sheffield, a junior from Salt Lake City majoring in dance specialization, said the biggest sacrifice she makes is in the time she spends with her husband.

Although the dancers choose to be a part of the company and to continue their education, each dancer has a different view of why she is willing to make the sacrifices.

"You have to do what makes you happy," Bunker-Sheffield said. "I need to dance to be happy." There are reasons why dancers are compelled to dance, said Marilyn Berrett, a graduate student in dance from Riverton, Utah.

According to Abraham Maslow, a behavioral psychologist, there are times when people have what is called a peak experience. This is when the physical, emotional and spiritual feelings come together in harmony to achieve a high, Berrett said.

"I find when I dance, I also feel this. 'Some people don't ever have that experience. I am very lucky to feel that, and I want to share it with other people,'" she said.

Although the dancers are dedicated to their dancing and the demands on their time are many, arrangements for their home life must always be considered.

"I try to be somewhat organized," said Joni Judd, a graduate student in dance from Soldotna, Ala. "I work out my schedule with my husband."

"Dancing is such an important part of my life, but it doesn't take the place of my children," Berrett said.

To justifiably continue her dancing, Berrett said, she has to serve others. Dancing cannot take precedence over her home life.

Even though quantity time cannot be spent with her family, it is important to spend quality time with them, she said.

Each of the dancers said they could not handle the load without the help and support of their husbands.

"I depend a great deal on my husband," Berrett said.

"We share the work load, and he cooks three meals a week." There is no way I could do that (dance) without the help of an incredible man."

Judd said her husband feels the importance of dance in her life and that is why he is supportive.

"He feels I need to have something I feel good about," she said.

Chamberlain wins role in miniseries

BURBANK, Calif. (AP)—The minute Richard Chamberlain learned that "The Thorn Birds" would be a miniseries, he wanted the role as the romantic Father Ralph.

Father Ralph de Braccasart set female hearts to fluttering in the Australian outback in Colleen McCullough's best-seller. In the book, the priest was trapped between his dedication to God and his love for Meggie Cleary.

It was a role that had originally been intended for Robert Redford. "Thorn Birds" was to be a big-budget theatrical movie, but after three directors and numerous efforts to scale the story down, it was finally decided to turn it into a miniseries for ABC.

"I heard about it and I went after it, the same as I did four years ago with 'Shogun,'" Chamberlain said. "I thought it would be sensational television drama." The story covers four generations.

"Several actors were being considered for it, and there was the same intense competition. I wasn't directly involved. It was the sort of juggling that goes on between studios and networks and agents."

It's something you have no control over. Then it finally got narrowed down to me, thank goodness, because I wanted to do it," he said.

It's the third miniseries role for Chamberlain. He was the Scottish trader Alexander McKeag in NBC's "Centennial" in 1978, and was John Blackthorne, the English navigator who becomes a Japanese samurai, in NBC's "Shogun" in 1980.

The 10-hour "Thorn Birds" begins Sunday on ABC and will also be seen Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

David L. Wolper and Stan Margulies guided the production, which was filmed on a $2.5 million replica of an Australian sheep station built in Simi Valley northwest of Los Angeles.

Upcoming Entertainment Events

Music lecture

A lecture by Harold S. Powers on "Sketches, Sets and Symmetries in Schoenberg's Third Quartet" will be given today at 7:30 p.m. in E-400 HFAC.

Powers has studied at Stanford and received a doctorate degree with a dissertation on the raga system from Princeton University.

He has taught at Harvard University and is currently professor of music at Princeton.

Powers' knowledge of Indian music was aided by his study in India.

"Viola and Friends"

Music faculty member David Dalton will join guest artists in a recital titled "Viola and Friends" today at 8 p.m. in the Madsen Recital Hall, HFAC.

Dalton and his wife, Donna, will open the program with their performance of "Children's Songs," written especially for the Daltons by Viennese composer Alfred Uhl.

Dalton will perform on the viola while his wife sings.

A second number, a duet, will be performed by Theodore Wight, a part-time music faculty member, on the flute, and his daughter Lysa on the harp.

A third number will be performed by Dalton, Thomasson and clarinetist David Randall. The composition is another one of Uhl's works, titled "Kleines Konzert."

Guest Julie Bevan Zumsteg will add a new sound to the recital with her cello as she joins Dalton and Randall in a performance of "Evocations of Slovakia" by Czech composer Karel Husa.

The recital will end with the performance of "Violafax" by Franz Zeyringer featuring Dalton, Randall and Thomasson.

Philharmonic Concert

A second performance of the Philharmonic Orchestra has been scheduled for March 30, the Music Department announced Wednesday.

According to Rich Clark, assistant to the concert manager, demand for tickets to the concert, which will feature Reid Nibley, Utah Artist of the Year, has been high. "Our phones have been ringing off the hook," Clark said.

Tickets for the original performance scheduled for March 31 sold out shortly after they were available.

Over 1,000 seats will now be sold for the first performance.

In Salt Lake

The record holder for the longest running one-man Broadway show, Victor Borge, will perform today at 8 p.m. in Symphony Hall in Salt Lake.

Borge broke the record in the 1950s when he performed "Comedy in Music" at Broadway's Golden Theater from Oct. 2, 1953, to Jan. 21, 1956—549 performances. He still holds the record.

Borge is an acclaimed musician with the ability to laugh at the music he loves, at life and at himself.

Appearing with Borge in tonight's performance will be pianist Sahar Arzruni.

Cinderella's fairy godmother gets help in musical fairy tale

By LORI STEPHENSON
Staff Writer

traditional "Cinderella" fairy tale not being told in a not-so-traditional form today at 6 p.m. in the Margarett Theater HPAC.

The play, presented by The Young Company's family theater troupe, is a contemporary musical with a new twist in the form of additional characters.

A white rabbit from "Alice in Wonderland" will make an appearance, assisting Cinderella's fairy godmother and eventually becoming the prime minister, said director Janice Magic is another new character not originally in the script, added by the company to help and play the piano, Card said.

Card said she was worried at first because the play and cast had already been selected and she took over the production of "Cinderella."

However, the different version is delightful and the script is fun and clever, she commented.

According to Card, the play is written for a family audience. There is definitely humor directed toward adults, but the play also has a lot of appeal for children, she said.

The company, which tours elementary schools and on Tuesdays and Thursdays, is composed of eight volunteer student-actors and about 30 performers during the run.

The greatest compliment has been that the teachers and teenage students have enjoyed the production as much as the children, Card said.

During performances the actors move into the scene, giving the children an opportunity to talk to them about their character roles and costumes.

Teachers will allow, the children often to get autographs, and some have even taken 40 minutes or more, Card said.

Comments such as, "Cinderella was so pretty," "I love the prince" are frequently heard from children watching the performance.

The prince has gotten a lot of love notes from the little girls, Card said.

The children also enjoy the comic acting during the stepmother and two step-siblings engage in, she said.

Young Company performers Jeff Jensen (the Handsome Prince), a freshman from Brigham City majoring in directing, and Susie Sessions (Cinderella), a freshman from Livermore, Calif., with an undegraded major, perform in an untraditional production of the fairy tale "Cinderella."

Networks battle ratings race; advertisers say they don't care

YORK (AP) — The ballyhooed network ratings race is like the potato-sack competition at any picnic. It's great for back-slapping, bragging and prestige-building, but outside the ratings, it's really meaningless.

The networks make a big fuss over beating one another and Nielsen's comparative numbers are available to the public, through hometown newspapers, each week. Everyone who cares at CBS is No. 1 so far this year.

"It's glamour in winning the season," says H. Kever, ABC's vice president for sales. "The ratings are very meaningful to program departments and stockholders."

Advertisers — the people who pay the bills — in this season-long competition virtually ignore it.

"We have practically zero interest in it," says Kostyra of the J. Walter Thompson agency. "The ratings are based on households, and our clients are about specific targets, like women 18-34."

Means if sponsors want women, they buy what they call "Dynasty" on ABC. If they want to pay for a chunk of NBC's "Hill Street Blues," they secure ratings reflecting overall performance is mostly for show, or show ratings.

Though major miniseries attract large audience ratings inflated by these blockbusters, they are disregarded by advertisers when they commercial time for the next season.

For individual programs do set next seasons for those shows. In setting charges, they disregard abnormal ratings from specialists like miniseries, the World Series or sports programs like the "M*A*S*H" finale, says.

Belushi murder suspect let go on $75,000 bail

TORONTO (AP) — The singer accused of murdering in comedian John Belushi's death from a drug overdose, was released Tuesday on $75,000 bail and ordered to stay in the Toronto area while she fights extradition to California.

York County Court Judge George Ferguson set the bail, which is equivalent to about $61,000 in U.S. funds, and ordered Smith to report to police twice a week and give notice if she changes address.

Less than two hours after the bail hearing, she walked from the courthouse, covering her face as she passed news cameras.

Smith, a backup singer for Gordon Lightfoot and other performers, was indicted last week by a grand jury in Los Angeles County on one charge of second-degree murder and 13 counts of supplying and administering dangerous drugs to Belushi.

She had been in custody since surrendering Friday to Toronto police.

Smith was gaunt-faced but smiling and animated as she entered the courtroom.

Ferguson imposed a publication ban pro-

'Blind Date' to play

Blind Date, a new performing group, will perform a Take Ten concert today at 10 a.m. in the ELWC Memorial Lounge.

The seven-member band will perform a number of top-40 hits. It will also play jazz songs from the 70s and 80s, according to Mike Wood, director of Take Ten.

The band stresses versatility in the music it performs and in its repertoire, which includes jazz, top 40, rock, Latin and some new wave selections. This enables the band to cater to the preferences of the group it plays for, he said.

A lot of the players have worked with and been involved in BYU jazz groups.

The band doesn't want to be labeled a top-40 band, but rather as a club-type band that does its own arrangements of the top 40 songs.

He said the band will present its own arrangements of such popular songs as "Get Down On It," by Kool and the Gang; "This Masquerade," a song made famous by George Benson, a jazz-rock version to the song "Fame"; and Melissa Manchester's "You Should Hear

SUMMER WORKFORCE

It's no secret—by now you know a summer sales position pays a lot of money. The big question is, which company should you work for? As you look at some of the different companies, perhaps you are a little confused, and with good reason. Almost all offer good commissions, good training, and a good bunch of people to work with.

You probably can't go wrong whichever you choose, right? Or maybe not so right. These days it's not enough to work for just a good company. Regardless of how big or how good your company is, if the consumer hasn't heard of it, he may think you're with one of those "Fly-by-Nights."

If so, you may never get to tell your story. He may even need what you've got, but he doesn't know if he can trust you! Sound familiar?

Up until now, the consumer has had no way of knowing the good guys from the bad guys. Now there is DIAL ONE.

DIAL ONE is an organization of the very best companies in over 35 trades and services. Whatever is needed for a commercial or residential property, there's a DIAL ONE company that can handle it. All DIAL ONE companies must meet strict standards, be financially secure, and have an established track record as successful businesses with consistently satisfied customers. In short, only the good guys qualify.

The DIAL ONE story will be told through newspapers and magazines, on the radio and on television. Billboards and a large fleet of white trucks with the DIAL ONE logo will remind consumers that a good man is no longer hard to find! And this image will help you make more sales and get more referrals.

DIAL ONE Metro Energy Services is looking for motivated individuals interested in earning enough money in 4 months to support themselves all year with plenty left over for extras. Call us right now to learn more and set an appointment for an interview. Or come to a short, fact-filled slide presentation:

Engineer to speak today

In recent years scientists have gained new understanding of how to make fuel burn more efficiently. An internationally known engineer will discuss this new knowledge in a presentation at BYU today.

Dr. Norman Chigier, currently William J. Brown Professor of Mechanical Engineering at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pa., will speak at a 10 a.m.-seminar in 2084 JKHB on combustion fluid mechanics.

The public is invited to attend, according to Dr. Geoff J. Germane, assistant professor of mechanical engineering and seminar coordinator.

University hopes rides on its Press

A university and its publishing press are intimate bed fellows and have been for centuries. Students here are seldom aware that BYU has a book publishing house, the University Press.

The University Press is more than the place where devotional talks are printed. Despite past rumors that its book publishing endeavors were being phased out for economic reasons, the Press actively continues to publish, according to J. Robert Driggs, BYU assistant vice president who serves as director of the organization.

This is heartening news. A press is inextricably tied to what a university is all about. The promotion of thought, the encouragement of excellent and thorough scholarship, and the provision of a forum for publishing in areas generally overlooked by trade houses are all things a university press is set up to accomplish very well.

The University Press has built solid reputations in early childhood education, law, western history and church history. Its strong law series is evidence that the Press is moving into an area ripe for contribution, especially from legal scholars close to home. The release of the critically acclaimed "Atlas of Utah," produced in cooperation with Weber State College, amounted to what book promoters dream of — a "publishing event."

If the Press is so inseparably a part of university life and its work merits plaudits, why have the number of published titles dwindled from 27 annually to less than 10? Questions of this nature are inevitably answered with one word — money. Traditionally, university presses have been supported entirely or nearly entirely with subsidies from their parent institutions. Our University Press, however, has never been basked in unbridled largess. Through the years it has had to meet the challenge of self support, a burden that has taken it into ventures perhaps not fully consonant with the expectation of scholastic university publishing.

Yes, money is tight now, even at this institution. Hard decisions are made every day about what to cut and what to keep. The University Press is definitely a "keeper," and moreover, deserves a steady infusion of university funds every year to insure a permanent avenue for solid scholarship. The avenue runs two ways, though. Academics on campus need to support the Press by presenting manuscripts of high quality and considerable potential in the market. The Press should provide incentives to authors in the form of superb and well-financed marketing efforts sufficient to help them think twice before running, manuscript lovingly in hand, to the larger houses.

When the promise of a large seat in the new stadium can bring dewy-eyed alumni to draw out their checkbooks, the need of the Press seems less glorious by comparison. It is not. The University Press must not be an afterthought, nor a millstone around the administration's neck, nor a nuisance that must be attended out of obligation. Let it flourish, plant it with good manuscripts, and fertilize it with commitment and greenbacks. Then stand back and watch our academic reputation grow.

PROVO (WP) --- PROFESSOR ARNIE FRANCIS OF THE ZOOLOGY DEPARTMENT WAS FORCED TO RESIGN AFTER SEVERAL OF HIS STUDENTS THREATENED TO TRANSFER IF HE WAS NOT REPLACED. ONE STUDENT TOLD THE ADMINISTRATION, "HE GRADED TOO HARD AND NEVER SMILED."

Health obsession has its drawbacks

One of the most ambiguous words in our language is "health." Over the last hundred years, the term has had various interpretative meanings. In the 19th century, it was vague to be overweight; artists tried to depict many of their famous patrons as plump and pale. Those caught with a slender figure were considered either too poor to feed themselves or sick. If you happened to have a slight tan, you were labeled as either a foreigner or a common day laborer.

Even today, people have conflicting ideas about the "healthy" look. Whether they admit it or not, many young mothers overfeed their babies because people generally consider thick infants unhealthy. Funny enough, 16 years later, when the daughter becomes overweight, they encourage her to break all of her home-taught eating habits and get in shape.

Because the "healthy" look is stressed today, more and more people are going out of their way to conform — despite the sometimes serious side effects. The death of singer/songwriter Karen Carpenter is a tragic example of what can happen to people when they use drastic means to lose weight.

When the Carpenters went to the White House in 1973, President Nixon described Karen as "young America at its best." Some of her friends have wondered if she perhaps tried too hard to live up to that description. As soon as she entered the limelight, Karen Carpenter worried about her weight. In trying to look the part, she starved herself to death. Evidently, her heart failure was a result of a low potassium level, which causes an irregular heart beat. Many doctors have noted that this symptom is a

Resignation a farce who will tell the truth

"Tell all the truth," mocked Emily Dickinson 100 years ago, "but tell it slant." Surely the insightful Miss Dickinson would have been impressed, therefore, by the many tiling veracities that appeared in the statement issued by BYU last week when Frank Arnold was fired.

Brigham Young University is grateful for the contribution Frank Arnold has made to Cougar basketball during the past eight years. However, after lengthy and thorough evaluation of every facet of the program, Coach Arnold has determined that it is in the best interest of all concerned to make a coaching change at this time."

Judging from the content of the above-quoted press release, one is led to believe that Mr. Arnold has spent the last six months of his life involved in deep pondering and fasting whether to continue as basketball coach. He then, after such study, came to the conclusion that he wanted to leave.

Sure, and now tell us the one about the three bears.

Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but in the church in which I was raised saying that "Coach Arnold has determined that it is in the best interest of all concerned to make a coaching change" is certainly nothing better than a half-truth. The difference between a lie and a half-truth, of course, being that a lie is what a student says that sends him to University Standards, while a half-truth is what an administrator issues in a press release that earns him accolades for sensitivity.

BYU would have us believe that such a statement was merely in the best interest of Coach Arnold, saving him the embarrassment of being fired. In truth, though, everyone west of Moscow knows Arnold was fired, and by saying that Coach Arnold willfully chose to resign does nothing more than raise questions out why a Christian union doesn't tell the whole truth.

BYU certainly doesn't stand in its use of half-truths in its statements. Everybody knows United States Football League wouldn't sign college underclassmen, and Herschel Walker didn't sign a contract, and Rita Le did nothing wrong with Sup and Richard Nixon was not a BYU, however, because of purports to be, ought to have "dard of its own." The use of truths is rampant throughout culture, no matter how untruthful they are conducting surveys to what they want a baptism, or who wants a football ticket, or an Elder Ezra Taff Benno himself decided to ban the State East Press.

Gratefully, there are still around who are willing to speak truth, no matter how uncomfortable the truth may be. Ex-Secretary Alexander Haig comes to mind. When asked about America's policy, Haig responded: "Our foreign policy is brilliant. At times, it's downright stupid when Haig resigned, at least he could no longer continue in his position. He could no longer continue in his position."

BYU certainly takes too much pride in its standards. But this is one where more clarity would hurt less than no one.

Here's hoping that everyone will stand up and explain exactly what happened that Frank Arnold's resignation. Meantime, the non-statement by BYU hurts Arnold more than it helps him. It's a lie, because it is in the form of confusion and ambiguity, rumor and gossip grow abundantly.

Letters to the Editor

No class in firing

Editor:

The dismissal of basketball coach Frank Arnold has raised many questions of just why he was asked to leave. It's amusing to see how his dismissal was announced as a resignation. I think a "forced resignation" is more appropriate.

BYU has always tried to project itself as a classy university, but it's a shame it had to blemish the proverbial "Excellence in the Eighties" campaign the administration is trying to sell. To have an athletic team come together in an organized meeting to discuss the program is one thing, but to have the Athletic Department buckle under to the threats of the players is another. Very seldom is there an athletic team where all the members of the team are happy and content with their coach.

In this case, the players resented Arnold's candor and frankness to the media, as well as his attitude toward his own players. Obviously, this relationship wouldn't qualify for a Harlequin romance. Yet, it's a shame to see the players carry the attitude they did and point fingers away from themselves.

What's even worse is the fact that in all the basketball games I attended, I was rarely impressed with the talent on the team. There are good basketball players everywhere and a heavy recruitment of junior college graduates with the promise of playing time could have replaced the ranks easily with just as good a team. I think the players overestimated themselves.

Mark Wade, Arlington, Texas

Witch hunt at Y

Editor:

The March 15 dismissal-resignation of Coach Frank Arnold brought an interesting sight to the BYU campus. A sight not seen since Salem, Mass. I marvelled as I heard my classmates and teachers report of the tyrannical acts of Coach Arnold. How he had struck players in practice and had forced two players on missions to hope that he (Coach Arnold) would be gone when they returned. I also heard of secret team meetings and boycotts that my fellow students and teachers had obviously seen firsthand. The thousands of allegations and charges made by these "experts" had me rush to check my Spring/Summer class schedule to see if new General Education requirements included Rumor Mongering 101. Tomorrow, if I hear that Frank Arnold personally planned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan or that he served as an intern at a Nazi concentration camp.

I personally support the administration's decision to hire a new basketball coach; after all, having Utah, Utah State and even Weber State go to the NCAA tournament while BYU stays home with the Utah Jazz speaks for itself. My personal opinion, however, does not allow me to be critical or to speculate on things I know nothing about, even if I did read them in the paper. Frank Arnold is not a tyrannical maniac; he just didn't win all the games that everyone demanded of him.

John Catron, Orem

Players cop out

Editor:

I have to laugh that Frank Arnold would be forced to resign because of his style of coaching and his manner of treating his players.

I can't believe that BYU and their fans would want a coach who sits by with his arms folded and a list of names when a bad call is given by the referee or one of his players is not performing as he should, and pretend everything is wonderful.

In my opinion, there's no pride or team spirit in the above kind of coaching. One of our religious beliefs is that "Who the Lord loves, he chastises." The same can be said for Frank Arnold and his relationship to his players.

You can't tell me that these players have never been chastised by their own mothers and fathers. In my opinion, the players are using Frank Arnold as a scapegoat for their inability to deal with life and their own inability to play the game of basketball.

Gene Hendrix, Burley, Idaho

Frank's the man

Editor:

When Mr. Tuckott and friends take a break from changing diapers and select a basketball coach, the decision should be easy. The best available coach for the job is Frank Arnold. The only reasonable alternative would require sending the missionaries to see for Bobby Knight. But, it's not too good at folding diapers either.

Dan Sroufe, Grady, Calif.

Spencer's best

Editor:

In the wake of Coach Arnold's resignation there have been many candidates being considered for the position, one of which is Jim Spencer of Provo High School. Before I go any further, I should state that I do not know Jim Spencer personally nor does he know me. This letter is completely unsolicited.

It is my hope that the BYU administration will make a wise decision in choosing a new head basketball coach. As a lifetime resident of Provo and a graduate of Provo High School, I can think of no one that would be better for the BYU basketball program than Jim Spencer. During his entire career, Coach Spencer has produced some of this nation's finest high school teams and individual players. He has accomplished this by a combination of hard work and a genuine concern and respect for other people. Coach Spencer has always been the complete loyalty and support of those he has worked with. I distinctly remember how fun it was to support the basketball team at Provo High, not only because of their winning record, but also because of the professional and personable way that Coach Spencer conducted the basketball program.

The name Jim Spencer may be unfamiliar to many at BYU. Perhaps a list of athletes to come out of his programs would be instructive: Clifford Nelson, Brett Vroman, Devin Durrant, Greg Balliff, Kelly Gardner, Steve Pingar, Vance and Veryl Law, Kevin Nielsen, and the list goes on. Need I say more?

Reading the new way

Dr. Verle G. McBride is a former bishop from Quincy, Ill., who now lives in Provo. He travels America teaching what he believes is the proper way to read.

Instead of reading word for word he feels that people should first train their eyes to see as many words as possible, whether they understand those words or not. He likes to see his students flip pages as fast as possible. McBride claims that a person's mind eventually recognizes the messages of entire lines, paragraphs and pages in a single glance. He also says it is necessary to start at the beginning of a page or the start of a sentence. Many of his students read up one page and down the next.

The average person reads 250 words a minute, and many educators feel that the highest possible reading rate is 900 words a minute.

The speed-reading advocate doesn't like the way teachers place these limiting rates on reading. McBride's students have reached up to 50,000 words a minute. McBride feels that people are suffering from reading anxiety and that they should read more slowly.

McBride says his many years experience in the field of reading taught him not to be surprised when where the human mind cannot. "Most of it in most cases remains unsaid," he claims.

Perhaps a change in the teaching people to read might help. When we read with the horse and buggy of when we should travel moon.
